The Cash Grocery Proposition

The Cash and Carry Grocery has come to stay: particularly an organization as your Grabateria Cash and Carry Grocery because the way the business was taken over and the combination of the owners former stores enables large quantity buying and the minimum delivery charge, minimum rent but the maximum activity of the owners.

When the market on butter, eggs, cheese, milk or any other staple article drops you will find The Grabateria Cash and Carry Grocery has all but anticipated the drop and has given the customer the reduction. We undersell the regular charge account groceries because of expense incident to that way of doing business is eliminated. We undersell the smaller cash groceries because we are able to buy in larger quantities, because of the larger outlet. Is that not all reasonable and true?
